

Thank you for your service.

Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II died at the age of 96.

She spent 70 years on the throne, after being crowned on 2 June 1953, meaning she ruled Britain for longer than any other King or Queen in history.

During her time as Queen, lots of things changed in Britain. But one thing that never changed was her strong sense of duty to the UK and the Commonwealth. Queen Elizabeth II will be remembered as a Queen who spent her life keeping the promise she made when she was first crowned - to serve her people and her country.

Early Years

In 1940, she gave her first speech on the radio at the age of just 14. In it, she sent her best wishes to children who had been evacuated from Britain to keep them safe from the war. On her 21st birthday, she broadcast a message, saying: "I declare before you that my whole life - whether it be long or short - shall be devoted to your service."

Elizabeth Crowned Queen

When Elizabeth became Queen in 1952, she did not just become the Queen of Great Britain. A big part of her role was being head of a special group of countries called the Commonwealth, which includes Australia, India, Jamaica and Canada. At the start of her reign, just eight countries were part of this group. By the time she passed away, she had increased membership of the Commonwealth to 54 countries.

In June 2022, the Queen celebrated a record 70 years on the throne as part of her Platinum Jubilee celebrations. The Queen has seen a huge amount of change to the UK and to the world during her reign, and over the years she became a loved and popular presence around the world.

She also lived to see the future of the Royal family secured with three future kings born during her lifetime: her son Prince Charles, her grandson Prince William and her great-grandson Prince George.

Many generations of prime ministers and world leaders have come to pay tribute to her, and she will be remembered as a monarch who never failed to put duty and service to her country at the center of her life.

UK's 57th PM

Liz Truss, announced that she was stepping down after just 45 days in office.

Ms Truss had only been in the job since 6

September but she was faced with a series of events and decisions which raised questions about her leadership.

In the end she lost the support of too many people in her party and decided she had to resign.

She was the PM with the shortest time in charge in UK history. The government then chose a new prime minister for the UK: Rishi Sunak.

He's the MP for Richmond in Yorkshire, and he's the United Kingdom's first British Asian leader.

He used to look after the country's money in a position known as the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

But what else do we know about the UK's 57th PM?
